ON THE OUTSKIRTS OF BABEL

JOHN MATT DORN, M.D.

INTRODUCTION

I admit to a fondness for book lists that began on Wednesdays in the eighth grade, when feet perched imperiously on the table in the corner I would review with inordinate glee the list of recommended reading. What seemed to others an onerous and pedantic exercise was to me a treasure map that dissolved the walls of the school around me.

The truth is my grandfather read to me constantly at the height of my oedipal phase. Then he died. On my eighth birthday I received the complete Tom Swift Jr. adventure series. I consumed them like Oreos®, reading one a day for a month. Later I applied the same zeal to the complete stories of Sherlock Holmes, and then Shakespeare's tragedies. Of course I became an English major in college. Take that beginning, add a pinch of obsessiveness, and it's easy to see why I needed to do this study.

Dynamics notwithstanding, I have often wondered why there is no recommended reading list for residents. I am told that other training programs have such lists and I know that in Britain there is an official list for trainees composed by the Royal College of Psychiatrists. There is an outdated copy of this list in the Jefferson library, but if you are interested in obtaining the current one you should write to: Headly Brothers Ltd/Ashford, Kent TN24 8HH. The cost is two pounds (probably more for overseas shipment).

There are probably many reasons why we do not have a reading list, but I think that one of the most important may be the partisan and ever changing nature of psychiatry itself. Analysts read about analysis, behaviorists read about behavioral therapy, and psychopharmacologists read about drugs. We share little common understanding of human behavior, and likewise, no common body of knowledge. On top of this ideas and opinions evolve so rapidly that deciding what is standard and should be read is a precarious matter.

In such an environment is there any use for a reading list? Perhaps not. There are arguments against it. Dr. Howard Field, Director of Consultation and Liaison Psychiatry, wrote to me about his objection to “core” reading lists:

... readings are only apposite in specific clinical situations. Otherwise, reading becomes a pedantic and sterile activity... My own preference is to ask questions and then go to an article or book for answers, to avoid a regular reading list with its implications of med-school examination, and its encouragement of the fantasy that one can master psychiatry by reading all of the books on the list.

Dr. Dorn is a fourth-year resident.
Of course Dr. Field is right. We cannot tilt at windmills. There are enough everyday clinical problems to keep one ferreting out articles for life. All the same, I think there is some value in favorites, in establishing and sharing a list of works that have been meaningful to our mentors. In a way that is what history is: a starting point, a beginning, something to hold on to. In his poem “Master Speed,” Robert Frost wrote:

No speed of wind or water rushing by
But you have speed far greater. You can climb
Back up a stream of radiance to the sky,
And back through history up the stream of time.
And you were given this swiftness, not for haste
Nor chiefly that you may go where you will,
But in the rush of everything to waste,
That you have the power of standing still—

METHOD AND CONCLUSIONS

A letter was sent to each psychiatrist in the Department of Psychiatry at Jefferson Medical College, asking them to return a list of the ten works that most influenced their evolution as a psychiatrist. No restrictions were made with regard to the nature of these works; they could include papers, as well as non-psychiatric literature. In a corollary question, I suggested that special mention could be made of any textbook that was recommended for residents. Enclosed with each letter was an answer sheet and a return envelope.

Of 300 requests, there were thirty replies. The results are compiled at the end of this article. The first list consists of the twenty-one most popular works, all of which received at least three separate recommendations. After that the rest of the responses are listed in alphabetical order according to the author. Separate lists follow that include those books with more than one author and then papers. The numbers enclosed in parentheses at the end of some works indicate the number of separate recommendations they received.

In reviewing the responses, it is no surprise that analytic works predominate. This confirms the acknowledged analytic bent of the Department. What did surprise me was the breadth of the responses, including many books and authors I had never heard of. Some of the more esoteric and idiosyncratic responses interested me the most, e.g., Collected Works of Robert Cruab and Death in Life: Survivors of Hiroshima by R. J. Lifton. For the most part, however, the responses were psychiatric in nature. I have the feeling that if I’d asked for more responses, I might have received less standard replies. Dr. Robert Dreyfus, Clinical Assistant Professor, wrote:

It feels much “safer” putting books like Fenichel on the list than books which are controversial—in a longer list I would have included Alan Watts, Ram Dass, Jay Haley, Bandler and Grinder, Stanislow Grof and a number of other people who have influenced me.
Perhaps the most startling of all the replies was a list that included just the Bible and Psychoanalysis and Religion by Eric Fromm. My first response was to dismiss this list as eccentric, but on second thought I think if I really understood the Bible I wouldn’t need the rest of the list.

Part of the fun of writing this article was trying to solve a few technical problems, such as seeking out the correct title of a book that’s out of print by an author who’s dead. I was humbled by the number of responses for which no author was listed, as if the work was so essential I must know who wrote it. “You mean, you haven’t read Penis Envy in the Aborigine? Tut, tut.”

To tie up some loose ends I would like to mention that some of the responses did not refer to specific works, but simply authors (Erickson, Horney, Piaget, and Mahler) or periodicals (Audiodigest, The American Journal of Psychiatry, Psychiatric Clinics of North America, and Psychoanalytic Study of the Child). These responses are not included in the list. With regard to my question concerning a recommended textbook, there was no contest. The Comprehensive Textbook of Psychiatry III was not only the most recommended textbook, but the most popular response as well. Finally, Dr. M. L. Bluitt was kind enough to send me a reading list he developed for residents three years ago. If you are interested in seeing this list, please contact Dr. Bluitt at the Coatesville VA Medical Center, Coatesville, Pennsylvania.

I would like to thank everyone who took the time and energy to respond to my questionnaire. It is my own definition that a professional is someone who attains an advanced state of knowledge for the benefits of others. I am indebted to all of my colleagues who have shared theirs with me.
