

Editor's Column

As change and reform become more important words in our vocabulary as physicians, I feel reassured that the Jefferson Journal of Psychiatry will continue in its current form. As we developed from an intradepartmental to an international publication we have experienced numerous changes, one of which was the need for funding from outside of Jefferson's residency program. I would like to take this opportunity to extend our appreciation to Dista/Lilly for their funding of the Jefferson Journal, beginning with this issue, which allows us to continue as an internationally-known resident publication.
