MY THIRTY MONTHS IN A JAP CAMP

By Lieutenant Madeline Ullom, Army Nurse Corps
Graduate of Jefferson Hospital, Class of 1938

Woman's Home Companion has granted us permission to reprint Lt. Madeline Ullom's article, "Thirty Months in a Jap Camp"

After thirty months as a Jap prisoner-of-war in Manila, I have a new conception of suffering. And I am convinced that women can take it better than men. At least they can take better the cruel day-in-day-out hardships.

I don't mean that the thousands of men in the Santo Tomas internment camp didn't do their part. But in close confinement and with nothing to do they were obviously at a loss. Perhaps they were too used to business or military routines.

Certainly they were magnificent at Corregidor when we watched the Rising Sun replace the Stars and Stripes on our flagpole. We women wept. The men, many of them wounded and all of them exhausted, did not give way. They stood straight and firm, but the whole story was written in their faces.

At the internment camp, however, we women were more adaptable. At any rate we found some amelioration of our lot in mothering the children, in housework, cleaning, caring for our hair, skin and nails, and in sewing. You know, clothes will wear out in three years!

My own clothing was already badly worn in July, 1942, when the Japs took sixty-four of us nurses off Corregidor and sent us to Manila. They told us we were to nurse the American wounded. Why they lied to us, I'll never know.

We knew the truth soon enough. The Japs shoved us off the three tugs that brought us to Manila and marched us through the ghostly silent streets—but not toward the hospital area! We told the Jap guards they must be mistaken. But they paid no attention. Then a few Filipinos came out of their houses, looked at us and shook their heads in sadness. So we knew, and it was no surprise when the walls and towers of Santo Tomas came into view.

An escort of Japanese with fixed bayonets picked us up at the gate and marched us into the inclosure. Several soldiers came up with baskets of papayas, pineapples, bananas and cigarettes—the first we had tasted since Corregidor. We knew this was too good to be true and how right we were!

At Corregidor we had heard of internees starving, of becoming living corpses. That was to prove the truer picture.

After we were checked in that first morning, the Japs threw us all—the sixty-four of us—into one not too large room and warned us, under severe penalty, not to talk to other internees. We were seven hellish weeks in this one room, huddled together, nervous, restless, constantly on edge.

Finally the Japs said we could have the freedom of the grounds and talk to others. Naturally we gabbed our heads off for more than a week.
The camp was getting crowded. I'd guess there were three to four thousand of us there altogether and in the confusion husbands, wives and children were often separated. Then a new order came through establishing a shantyville community of military-type huts for families and they had some chance of achieving a semblance of home life.

Those of us who were quartered in the main buildings were allowed a foot locker apiece, a suitcase, our musette bags, an extra pair of socks, handkerchiefs, half a jar of cold cream, panties, bras, toothpaste and brush, some cosmetics if we had any and a chocolate bar. Everything else was taken away.

Men and women were placed in separate rooms. Women and children were on the second floor, invalids on the third, and men on the top floor. The Japs allowed us to sit together outside, but not too close together. After the Japs saw how we enjoyed our ground-sitting parties, they made the camp committee appoint a squad whose sole duty was to break up the parties.

Of one of our hardest problems was the simple effort to keep clean, to keep our clothes fresh. We soaked our clothes in fire buckets overnight to save soap. We had to sign up long in advance to use the one flatiron and when that was unavailable we stretched our skirts to get out the wrinkles. Charcoal to heat the iron came from a flourishing black market to which Jap guards were not averse, so long as they profited.

The main buildings were most uncomfortable in the early morning when hundreds of women had only a few short minutes each to try to wash their face and hair, or clothes. One of the internees set up a hairdressing salon in her shack and charged us seven pesos, about three dollars and fifty cents, for permanents. Later the price rose to eighty-five pesos, or forty-two dollars, because hairdressing supplies finally had to come from the black market also.

The Japs allowed us little food and never gave us meat. The Internee Administration—a committee of internees who dealt with the Jap administration—supplemented what was allowed with food donated by Swiss, Danes, Irish, Filipinos and other free nations. Money contributed to the camp committee by many people on the outside came in handy—we bought of course through the Jap-controlled black market.

When we had food, the women prepared it and the men cooked it. Utensils wore out early—the Japs would give us none—so we used tin cans and even they were soldered and repaired over and over again.

The Japs brought the food to us in garbage pails which had been used to carry out the remains of the garrison's meals. It was revolting and we never stopped protesting—but it was eat it or starve to death.

Some free space was available in the camp and we drew lots the first year for individual gardens, so many of us could supplement our diet with lettuce-like Nippon cabbage, radishes or banana shoots. We worked in the hot sun on our knees with our fingernails tearing at the soil and worms slithering about. But it was worth it to get food.

One day a bathroom fixture went out of gear and an internee who acted as plumber for the camp arrived to fix it. As he walked into the room we had a woman's scream. She was bathing and we heard her cry: "Get out at once." He tumbled out, red-faced, but he couldn't resist calling back: "Okay, lady, I'll get out. But honest, I'd rather see a ham sandwich."

For children it was a pitiful state. When the American troops broke into Santo Tomas on Saturday night, February third, and rescued us the soldiers passed out candy, chocolates and cigarettes to all. One nice youth—a tall fellow who hailed from Brooklyn—picked up a youngster born in the camp. "How would you like a big ice cream cone?" he asked. The child answered: "I don't know. I've never had ice cream, but I'll take a camote." Camote is a rather tasteless native potato, but to a child born in Santo Tomas it was a luxury.

One nice thing in the camp was the loud-speaker system rigged up by Don Bell, a former NBC announcer. We had a few records, all 1941 vintage of course, but much loved. Even after a thousand repetitions, they were a real voice from home.

We also organized all kinds of clubs—lecture clubs, reading clubs, gardening clubs, anything to keep busy. With nerves taut because of malnutrition, loneliness, homesickness and worry, we all realized the important thing was to prevent quarreling among ourselves.

To keep busy we went so far as to name the huts the families lived in, one by one, and hours were passed selecting and chalking up signs that read Shantyville, Glamourville, Jungletown, Frothybottom and Jerkvillle. And then for each street or avenue we selected fake mayors—all meaningless, but it served to keep us busy. Our word for this was SOP—Standard Operating Procedure.

Of course much time was spent just trying to get food and that kept us out of trouble, too, except once, for me, when friends from the outside slipped me some money, for use in the black market. Now we were always forced to bow low from the waist when passing a Jap guard—even little children were not excepted—and I passed one on my way to the market. I bowed low and from the bosom tumbled the roll of pesos. I was not only embarrassed, but I had to spend too much time in jail. I'll never bow to a man again.

We women also kept busy, and tried to be well-dressed ladies, too, by making our own clothes. We used bamboo knitting needles and wool from hopelessly dilapidated garments to make some things. And we cut our existing clothes into various new patterns. We also used bamboo clothespins so as not to wear out the clothes we had too rapidly, and hung out our wash very wet for the sun to bleach. None of us had the strength to scrub our clothes, so this sort of bleaching was necessary.

We used our cosmetics most sparingly. My own group of sixty-four nurses used it for professional reasons only, so to speak. We were all on constant duty because there were so many sick internees in the camp, and the precious lipstick came out to be used triumphantly when a patient needed special cheering up. Men and women both, they all did appreciate that reminder of what used to be and what would be again, they knew.

- The author, blonde, blue-eyed, born thirty-four years ago in O'Neill, Nebraska, has served as an army nurse since 1938. Two years after she was commissioned, she was assigned to the Philippines, where she served side by side with our heroic soldiers on Batan and Corregidor. She was still caring for sick and wounded Americans when the fortress fell to the Japanese. She started back to the United States shortly after radioing us these personal experiences.

NEW LINEN SYSTEM AT JEFFERSON

A new central linen service is being planned by the Linen Committee. Miss Margaret Jackson, Acting Directress, is chairman. The members are Miss Grace Jennings, representing the wards; Miss Olga Dygan, representing the private patients; Mr. Ganister, the Business Manager, representing the Administration and the Laundry, and myself, representing the Housekeeping Department, since all linen is under the jurisdiction of this department.

The central linen room will be operated adjacent to the Laundry and a conveyor has been installed to take the clean linen directly from the mangle to the central linen room.

Clean linen will be dispensed by the central linen room to a linen closet on each floor. The closets are to be kept locked while the supervisor will be in possession of the key and she will issue the linen for the floor.

The amount of linen for use on each floor will be determined by a formula which is being worked out by the committee, taking into consideration the number of patients admitted, the ambulatory, incontinent and post-operative on each floor.

All linen not on the bed is to be kept in the closet and an employee from the central linen room will check the stock in the closet daily.

EMMA M. BAHNER, R.N.,
Executive Housekeeper.

WELCOME! MISS JACKSON

Margaret M. Jackson, R.N., B.S., graduated from St. Timothy's Memorial Hospital and House of Mercy, now Roxborough Memorial Hospital, 1919. From July 1919 to 1920, she did Private Duty Nursing. From 1920 to 1921, Miss Jackson became Night Superintendent of Roxborough Memorial Hospital. Later, in 1921, she advanced to Acting Superintendent at the Roxborough Memorial Hospital. From January to March, 1922, she was Head Nurse at Philadelphia General Hospital. Miss Jackson returned to Roxborough Memorial Hospital as Acting Superintendent, April to June, 1922, and then advanced to Superintendent of Nurses of the Roxborough Memorial Hospital, July, 1922, to September, 1942. September, 1942, to June, 1943, Miss Jackson attended University of Pennsylvania. In August, 1943, to October, 1944, Miss Jackson was Assistant Director, Jefferson Hospital School of Nursing. In November, 1944, Miss Jackson advanced to Acting Director Jefferson Hospital School of Nursing.

The Jefferson Alumnae takes this opportunity to welcome Miss Jackson as our Acting Director of Nurses. We offer her our support, and we are more than pleased to have her with us.
Dear Alumnae Members Everywhere:—

We at Jefferson Hospital are just as busy as ever. We have a peak enrollment of 350 students in the school, 226 of whom are members of the United States Cadet Nurse Corps. The graduate staff members 102. Our census is higher than ever, with the wards filled to overflowing and additional private accommodations on 6th Annex.

We have recently welcomed Miss Martha Riland to the Administrative Staff, and Mrs. Sarah Saunders, Miss Druckenmiller and Bette Wagoner to the Nursing Arts Staff.

Eighteen members of the faculty and staff are attending classes at the U. of P.

The Health Report of the students for the past year shows 883 days' illness among 175 students against 1,591 days and 224 students the previous year. A result, no doubt, of the 8-hour day, a night off each week for night nurses, increased number of students and of volunteers.

We now participate in the National League of Nursing Education, Pre-Nursing and Guidance Test Program. Our plan is to admit at least 96 pre-clinic students in the fall. Like everyone else, we have a "Housing Problem," but the hospital has come to the rescue and purchased 1008 and 1020 Spruce Street and are proceeding with the necessary alterations.

Two Senior Cadet Nurses are stationed at the Veterans' Hospital, Perryville, Md. Eight more students will leave August first for senior Cadet service in government hospitals.

Under the able guidance of Miss Maxfield, Assistant to the Dean of Women at the U. of P., student government was reorganized and the first meeting held March 13, 1945, with Miss Florence Schmick presiding. The girls are to be congratulated.

Volunteer Nurses' Aides and Gray Ladies continue to render valuable service of high calibre to the hospital, 123 Nurses' Aides gave 16,050 hours and 376 Gray Ladies gave 40,513 hours the past year. Mrs. Mary B. Graziani is Director of Volunteers. Special mention is also made of those Alumnae members who have volunteered one, two and three days a week at the hospital.

Inasmuch as equipment is so difficult to obtain, we consider ourselves very fortunate to obtain 12 new gated beds and 12 bedside cabinets for the Nursing Arts Laboratory.

An outstanding accomplishment of the year was the compiling of a Procedure Book. Credit for this goes to Miss Janet Correll.

A central linen service is about to be inaugurated. It will be handled.

The new food service for ward patients deserves special mention. Miss Walker had courage to undertake it at this time, and the results have been most gratifying.

Before the summer is over we expect to occupy our new offices. The plans include an office for the Alumnae Association.

I wish you were all just around the corner so you could drop in to see the improvements, such as:—painting, new floor coverings and new equipment. Also the attractive uniformed girls on the elevators.

Think of us often, we appreciate and need your moral support.

Best wishes to each of you at home and abroad.

Sincerely,

MARGARET M. JACKSON, R.N.,
Acting Directress, School of Nursing.

A STEP FORWARD

February 20, 1945, a new Food Service was started on Ward Floors of Jefferson Hospital. This was a venture that had been hoped on and planned a number of years. That it should come to pass in a time when food problems are difficult is a stronger reason why it should grow and improve with experience.

The system used in serving Diet Therapy Trays is now used for all patients on 2nd, 3rd and 4th floors. Food is prepared in Main Kitchen on 7th floor and sent to different floors. The Metabolic Kitchen has been discontinued. Time utilized there by Student Nurses is devoted to Trays on floors under supervision of Dietitians, weighing, measuring and getting trays ready to serve.

A class room will be set up for calculation, records, etc., as needed for hours of Diet Therapy work assigned to students. This includes time assigned to each student of this type of work—effort being directed towards acquainting patient and student with their dietary needs; this being a more concrete study of effect of diet in disease.

Diet Therapy students are assigned to floors; so are directly responsible for all food, including prescribed diets. A room for special formulas, or feedings, will be set up where only this type of nutrition is handled.

The Jefferson Hospital Staff are pleased to tell you of this new venture in our service to the public, so long needed. We welcome you to visit us. The entire Nursing and Dietetic Staff have joined hands in this effort. We are endeavoring to improve as its continues.

Respectfully,

MARTHA WALKER.

STREPTOMYCIN

Streptomycin is produced by actinomycetes griseus, was developed by Waks­man. It is active against various gram­positive and gram-negative bacteria. It has been given to patients with Typhoid Fever and Undulant Fever with apparent success. It has also been used against bacillary urinary tract infections.

When given intravenously or intra­muscularly it is secreted mostly in the urine, and if given by mouth, there is lit­tle or no blood level, most being recov­ered in the stools.

As a compliment to penicillin it ap­pears to have a bright future. At present it is slightly toxic causing flushing, pain at site of injection and some change in blood pressure in susceptible individuals.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE NURSING ARTS LABORATORY

During the past year the Nursing Arts classroom has had its teaching facilities in­creased. There are now in the classroom thirteen complete bedside units where the students may practice nursing procedures.

One of the beds used for teaching purposes is a modern Simmons bed com­plete with overbed table and side re­strains. There are a great variety of positions available by means of adjusting this bed, providing more comfort for the patient and greater aid for the nurse in carrying out her procedures.

The beds making up the rest of the units are the familiar Gatch type which are in use on the wards and with which the student has most contact.

Chairs and cabinet type bedside tables with complete equipment make up the rest of the units.

In addition to a greater number of units, the classroom has been provided with an additional work table for various student projects.

These additions became necessary with the increase in student enrollment. Con­trary to former practice, the student now learns to take complete care of a patient and his unit and can demonstrate to her instructor whether or not she can ade­quately carry out her nursing procedures.
